I am very disappointed at the weak approach DOJ has taken in this case. As a Macintosh user, the monopolistic practices of MS are evident. Apple hangs on by a thread, and only because MS needs it as evidence of fair competition.

The high price of MS software indicates a market lacking competition, and a short look at history shows many companies failing when confronted by the huge resources of MS.

Please reconsider your approach to this case. The US will prosper when competition is truly fair.
